Lieut. Thurston Carlisle Here

Lieut. Thurston Carlisle spent the week-end here with his mother Mrs. John Carlisle and, accompanied by his wife and baby, has returned to Randolph Field where he is connected with the air corps as a ground and instrument instructor. He likes his work in preference to his previous work with the U. S. Army as a parachute jumper. Aviation has become quite a science and as mathematics is the basic plan of all calculations necessary in the science, the standards for cadets to enter the air corps are higher than the usual requirements.
