

The Giddings News

September 19, 1924

July Cotton

John Bohot of the Concord community planted about six acres of cotton the first part of July and he thinks he will gather at least one-half a bale to the acre. He planted the cotton after he had finished saving his fodder, and the boll weevils did not damage the squares because the weather was so hot and the cotton did not grow rank.

John Bohot, Augy Baack, and Wm. Baage, farmers of the Concord community, are feeling good over their cotton crop this year, as the output is very satisfactory. Another good farmer, Robert Els, has joined the Concord bunch so next year he might make the old timers of Concord hustle.