

The Giddings News

January 13, 1922

Adolph Pampel spent a sad Christmas because just before the holidays as he was firing the boiler at the Giddings Manufacturing Company's plant the flow of oil became checked in some manner. He cut off the steam and oil and was walking away from the boiler when an explosion blew the doors open and threw fire over him. He was burned considerably on one arm and about his face but is improving.
