

The Giddings News

April 3, 1931

ALMOST SUFFOCATED

Mrs. Earhardt Sander came near suffering a fatality Tuesday afternoon. She was at work in the clothes closet of her home, the Waitman house, when her little child closed the door, trapping Mrs. Sander, because the latch was on the outside. She remained there for about two hours, and was rescued when two young lady teachers who room at the same place, came in from school. They accidentally heard a faint noise, investigated, and called the neighbors who opened the door, finding her in a swoon. The young ladies generally go by town on their way from school, and had they done so that afternoon, the probabilities are that Mrs. Sander would have been dead.