Zoch it to me

It was a ballet in the sky of sorts Thursday when workers from Lee County-based ZochNet installed equipment on the city's Mill Street water tower. The city council recently approved an agreement with ZochNet. In exchange for using the tower the company will provide free Internet at all city parks, City Hall, the police department and the city library, according to City Manager Chris Whittaker. ZochNet, with headquarters in Giddings, was created to provide high-speed Internet service to rural areas of South Central Texas and now serves Milam, Lee, Burleson and Bastrop counties.
