Injured in Wreck

Walter Keng was driving his auto toward town at the crossing below the oil mill and was watching a train in the direction of the depot. The north-bound Dalsa passenger train came around the curve and was upon him almost before he knew it. He turned his auto in an effort to drive up the track ahead of the train, but the rails were so high that it was impossible for the wheels of the auto to cross, so the engine struck the auto, turning it over and bruising him considerably. Prompt assistance was given and he is improving.
